How will health care providers know if I have any Advance Directives?

Will my Advance Directives be followed?

Generally, yes, if they comply with Texas law. Federal law requires your health care providers to give you their written policies concerning advance directives. A summary statement of those policies is provided for you at the back of this book. It may happen that your doctor or other health care provider cannot or will not follow your advance directives for moral, religious or professional reasons, even though they comply with Texas law. If this happens, they must immediately tell you. Then they must help you transfer to another doctor or facility that will do what you want.

Can I change my mind after I write an Advance Directive?

Yes. At any time, you can cancel or change any advance directive that you have written. To cancel your directive; simply destroy the original document and tell your family, friends, doctor and anyone else who has copies that you have cancelled them. To change your advance directives, simply write and date a new one. Again, give copies of your documents to all the appropriate parties, including your doctor.

A lawyer may be helpful and you might choose to discuss these matters with him or her, but there is no legal requirement in Texas to do so. You may use the forms that are provided in this booklet to execute your advance directives.

Will my Texas Advance Directive be valid in another state?

The laws on advance directives differ from state to state, so it is unclear whether a Texas advance directive will be valid in another state. Because an advance directive is a clear expression of your wishes about medical care, it will influence that care no matter where you are admitted. However, if you plan to spend a great deal of time in another state, you might want to consider signing an advance directive that meets all the legal requirements of that state.
